WHAT'S HOT

ALERT!

Trail funding comes down to the wire in Congressional debate - and your help is needed NOW!

Compromises are being made in conference and may be devastating for trails!

The House and Senate began a conference committee in early May to try to reconcile their two versions of a new surface transportation bill. Until this week, it has appeared that there were irreconcilable differences and many leaders in the trails world projected there most likely would be another extension until following the election. However affairs have DRAMATICALLY changed over the last couple of days, and there may very well be a bill by the June 30th deadline, when the current authorization expires.

Compromises are being made in conference and may be devastating for trails! The trails community has worked tirelessly to secure dedicated funding for Recreational Trails, Transportation Enhancements, and Safe Routes to School. Under new discussions, these programs are at great risk, as one proposal gives Governors the opportunity to opt out of these programs.

As the debate in Congress continues, NOW is a crucial time to let your Senators and Representative know that you support funding for trails and bike/pedestrian facilities.

ACTION NEEDED:

The message is simple, tell your members of Congress:

Please preserve dedicated funding for the Recreational Trails Program, Transportation Enhancements, and Safe Routes to School.

Call or email your members of Congress now:

June 28 webinar: The Art of Sustainable Trail Management

Space is limited! Reserve your seat today!

Tony Boone of Tony Boone Trails, LLC will present “The Art of Sustainable Trail Management” on June 28. Learn the essentials of developing and managing natural surface, shared-use trail systems from a professional trailbuilder with years of international experience. Tony’s expertise has helped guide, sculpt, and construct over 800 kilometers of world class trails in China, the Phillippines, and Australia. His passion is creating sustainable, kinesthetically, and aesthetically diverse trails, and teaching others to do the same. He is highly skilled in the utilization and training of state-of-the-art trail technology and trail building equipment. Tony has been an active member of American Trails and the Professional Trail Builders Association since 1995. His primary focus since the summer of 2010, has been assisting the International Mountain Bicycling Association (IMBA) to develop their international markets. The webinar is geared primarily towards beginning and intermediate level trailbuilders: including volunteers, agency staff, and professional trail crews. The online seminar continues the American Trails “Advancing Trails Webinar Series.” Learn more and register now!

New National Recreation Trails announced for 2012

In its annual announcement of new National Recreation Trail designations, the Department of the Interior celebrated the addition of 54 trails to the National Trails System. The trails are located in 23 states and span a wide range of activities, histories, and environments. Several new water trails are included, continuing the trend toward more designated paddling routes across the country. Other types of trails range from backcountry pathways, rail trails, and community greenways, as...

Secretary Salazar establishes the National Water Trails System (NWTS), a new class of NRTs

As of March 2012, there is a new element to utilizing the National Recreation Trails (NRT) program authority. Based on the priority actions of the America's Great Outdoors report, Department of the Interior Secretary Salazar has established the National Water Trails System (NWTS), a new class of NRTs. The National Water Trails System will protect and restore America's rivers, shorelines, and waterways; conserve natural areas along waterways; and increase access to outdoor recreation on waterways and shorelines. The vision of the NWTS is to create a distinctive national network of exemplary water trails that are cooperatively supported and sustained by public, private, and/or nonprofit entities. With the recent development of the National Water Trails System, an enhanced focus on providing and promoting water-based trail opportunities throughout the United States will complement the existing network of National Recreation Trails. Rivers, lakes, and other waterways can now apply to become part of the National Water Trails System. To apply, the water trail manager will follow the basic guidelines of the National Recreation Trails program; in addition, they need to address how seven (7) best management practices are followed on their water trail. Learn more and make application at http://www.nps.gov/watertrails. Read Frequently Asked Questions...

Great Outdoors Month Proclaimed by White House, Governors

The President and nearly every Governor have declared June 2012 as Great Outdoors Month. The American Recreation Coalition anticipates that the remaining Governors will issue proclamations before the month ends. The proclamations are each unique, but certain themes are dominant. At least 40 proclamations emphasize the role outdoor recreation plays in mental and physical health. Support for conservation efforts is referenced in 37 of the documents, and the importance of the outdoors for kids and families is mentioned in 22. Volunteerism is praised in 19 - and virtually all urge people to go out and enjoy the Great Outdoors! You can view President Obama's proclamation here. Additional proclamations will be posted as they are received.

Editorial: Urban trails essential to our healthy community

"Urban trails have become an essential element to quality of life in cities all over the United States," says the featured Opinion in the Spokane Spokesman-Review. "A generation after it began, urban trailblazing continues to expand recreation opportunities across Spokane County. The new hiking and bicycle paths may lack the romance of the covered-wagon era, but the health and economic benefits will be just as long-lasting." Read the editorial...

Funding crisis threatens West Virginia bridge renovation

"For at least 10 years, Charleston-area trail enthusiasts have dreamed about converting the old CSX rail trestle across the Kanawha River for cycling and walking," writes Jim Balow in The Charleston Gazette. "The 105-year-old span would be the key link -- the centerpiece -- of the Kanawha Trestle Trail that would stretch from the state Capitol to South Charleston and beyond. Last Monday, though, City Council members... dealt a crushing blow to those dreams when they 're-purposed' almost $800,000 of federal transportation funds that Rep. Shelley Moore Capito, R-W.Va., had earmarked for the project in 2004." Read more and see photos...

A lift, a tug, a yank, and a new bridge floats into place

Installation of an unusual timber truss trail bridge made for an aerial ballet on the Oak Leaf Trail in Milwaukee. The 96-foot bridge, which replaces a steel railroad bridge, was assembled off-site. The Journal Sentinel reported that, "Its glued, laminated arches and other pieces were built in the Dakotas by Wheeler Lumber and shipped to Milwaukee as a giant kit." Read more and see video...

Violet Crown Trail to link 30 miles of Austin communities and open space

Almost the entire 30 mile trail route has been acquired, reports Austin360.com, and a master plan is finished. Environmental and engineering studies are mostly done and trail routes scouted. "It will be the longest regional trail in Central Texas," said Butch Smith, project manager with the Hill Country Conservancy, which has been instrumental in planning the trail. Read more and see maps...

Cleveland Metroparks unveils 10 miles of bike-friendly trails

Most of the new trail system, which includes 34 bridges, is meant to be shared by hikers and bikers. Two miles are strictly for hikers. "The new trails take the place of an existing trail system. The parks eventually will remove the old trails, which have widened over time because of run-off and use," reports James Ewinger in The Plain Dealer. The trails were built primarily by hand, with Student Conservation Association and Cleveland Mountain Bike Association providing most of the labor. Read more and see map and photo...

Connecting Kids and Families to the West's Great Outdoors

The Western Governors’ Association's new report finds that children in the West are spending less time enjoying the region's great outdoor spaces. This is especially true of the youngest Westerners. The report asks, "If getting kids out into nature can 'boost mental acuity and creativity and promote health and wellness' as Richard Louv claims, then what can families, the public and private sectors, do to help connect kids to the outdoors near their homes and schools?" State programs are described as models for action. Learn more and read recommendations...

New Zealand creates new trail system with a focus on tourism

In 2009 the New Zealand Government began to form a $NZ 50 million project into a 1,500-mile network of 19 “Great Rides.” New Zealand Cycle Trail Programme Manager John Dunn says the economic vision was to create immediate jobs through construction of the cycle trails, and longer term jobs via the increased tourism demand that a network of cycle trails would bring. There would also be complimentary health, environmental, and recreational benefits for both New Zealanders and visitors from offshore. Read more and see photos...

China launches Pearl River Delta Greenway Network

In August 2009, the government of Guangdong Province, China, announced the first greenway project in the country’s history - a major greenway network to serve the population of the greater Shenzhen region in southern China. This is an urban and rural area with over 25 million inhabitants. The Pearl River Delta Greenway Network Plan called for building a regional network of over 1,000 miles with six branches of inter-city routes networking 200 forests, parks, natural conversation areas, and scenic spots. Volunteers are making ambitious trail partnerships work

"To face the reality of declining budgets at every level of government required to provide for maintenance and reconstruction of our national trail systems is a depressing and serious problem," writes Alan Hill with the Shasta Trinity Unit of Backcountry Horsemen of California. He explores the success as well as complexity of a 20-year partnership among the Shasta Trinity Unit of Backcountry Horsemen of California, US Forest Service, and California Conservation Corps. All trail users will be interested in the lessons learned and how the partnership process works. Read more and see photos...

Separate trails in the same corridor provide for different activities. In many urban trail corridors the sheer amount of use creates some difficulties for sharing the trail. Wider trails are one solution. But how wide do you want to make the trail? And does a single surface material satisfy all trail users? In many cases, the better solution is to provide two or even three pathways or trail treads with different surfaces. Other treatments seek to make the separation of treads more clear. Featured NRT: Kanatak Trail, Becharof National Wildlife Refuge, AK

One of the newly-designated National Recreation Trails of 2012, the Kanatak Trail, is in a remote and primitive natural setting. The route was used for centuries as a connection between the Pacific Ocean and the Bering Sea by the resourceful people of the Alaska Peninsula, and provides an unusual educational and recreational experience for today’s visitor. Getting to the trail is an adventure in itself, requiring a boat or plane. Recent improvements to the trail, which is managed by the US Fish and Wildlife Service, were made by a Student Conservation Association crew. Read more and see photos...
