April 21 webinar: "The FAST Act: Advancing Trails with the New Federal Transportation Bill"

Join us for our next webinar in the Advancing Trails webinar series, "The FAST Act: Advancing Trails with the New Federal Transportation Bill." This webinar is presented by Marianne Fowler, Kevin Mills, and Leeann Sinpatanasakul of Rails-to-Trails Conservancy and will discuss the FAST Act legislation passed by U.S. Congress in December 2015. The presenters will explain what the legislation means for trail funding of future projects. They will go over changes to the Transportation Alternatives Program that funds walking and bicycling projects, and review the Recreational Trails Program, which remains the same since the last legislation. The webinar will also touch on new provisions to a low-interest loan program (TIFIA), which could help communities - in urban, suburban, or rural areas - more quickly build a complete trail or active transportation network. Learn more and register for this webinar...

Our webinars are eligible for CEUs that we offer through the Texas Recreation and Park Society (TRAPS), an authorized independent CEU provider.

May 19 webinar: "Trails and Towns Together: How Communities Capitalize on Trail Tourism"

Mark your calendars for American Trails' May webinar, "Trails and Towns Together: How Communities Capitalize on Trail Tourism." Efforts to link "trail-to-town" have played a part in remaking communities. This webinar will include a case study of the first known "trail town" initiative - the Trail Town Program® along the Great Allegheny Passage. This webinar will appeal to trail and community advocates who are interested in launching their own programs, as well as to managers of existing programs who want to hear about how they can take their programs to the next level. The webinar is presented by William Prince with The Progress Fund's Trail Town Program®, Rita Hennessy with the National Park Service, and Amy Camp with Cycle Forward (and American Trails Board member). LWCF announces 2016 awards

Nearly $95 million will be distributed from the Land and Water Conservation Fund (LWCF) to all 50 states, U.S. territories, and the District of Columbia to support conservation and recreation projects in local communities. The funds, which are generated out of a portion of the lease revenue from offshore oil and gas development, support State-identified and community-supported projects that create jobs, contribute to local economies, and grow outdoor recreational opportunities in virtually every county across the country. Tennessee bill attacking bicycle and pedestrian funding killed

A controversial legislative bill restricting Tennessee cities and counties' use of gas taxes (RTP funds) for parks, greenways, bike lanes, and similar infrastructure is dead for the year. House Bill 1650 (and its companion bill SB 1716) was officially "taken off notice" by its sponsors in the Tennessee legislature, effectively killing the bill. Read more...

Trail art brings new life to St. Louis neighborhood

Over the past several years, the Great Rivers Greenway District has led development projects along a region-wide interconnected system of greenways and trails in the St. Louis region. One specific area, the West End neighborhood, had declined significantly due to crime and deterioration. With the help of nearby residents and community groups, Great Rivers Greenway has worked to improve the trail and surrounding areas through safety improvements, art projects, and several art initiatives that reflect the rich culture and history of the area. Sonoma County trails becoming more accessible

Only a few years ago, many people with disabilities found it difficult to locate accessible trails in the Sonoma County area. Thanks to improvements on the north side of Sugarloaf's Creekside Nature Trail, everyone can enjoy the trail that winds along a creek among heavy oak trees and leads to a woodpecker colony. Young crews from the California Conservation Corps began trail improvement work in February, including re-contouring the trail surface to increase wheelchair accessibility. This accessibility project is just one of many in Read more...
How one of America's "worst walking cities" got moving

Oklahoma City was once known for its large traffic lanes, minimal sidewalks, and overall lack of safety to pedestrians. Now, the city's sedentary reputation is rapidly changing due to an $18 million improvement fund that is creating a walker-friendly environment for many of its busiest regions. The increased funding has also been accompanied by the city’s mayor issuing a challenge for Oklahoma City residents to lose one million pounds, as well as working with several fast food chains to offer healthier menus. "We are creating a city where your kids and grandkids will choose to stay," Cornett said. Oklahoma City's mission now is to widen the walkable section of the city outward. Read more...

The Surgeon General releases Call to Action to promote walking and walkable communities

The Surgeon General has asked Americans to walk more and has called on the nation to better support walking and walkability. The Call to Action outlines five goals to promote walking and walkable communities: make walking a national priority; design communities that make it safe and easy to walk for people of all ages and abilities; promote programs and policies to support walking where people live, learn, work, and play; provide information to encourage walking and improve walkability; and fill surveillance, research, and evaluation gaps related to walking and walkability. Explore the Adirondacks on one-of-a-kind bicycle: the railbike

A portion of the Adirondack railroad in New York is opening this summer, but not for trains. Instead, the tracks will be occupied by Pedal Powered Railbikes, bringing people to lakes, streams, and forests that haven't been easily accessible for decades. The railbike route spans for six miles from Saranac Lake to the community of Lake Clear. The railbike tour will open June 18 and runs through November 1. Read more and see photos...

Anchorage Trails Initiative gives economic growth and renewal to communities

A grassroots initiative in Anchorage, Alaska is focused on a vision for the city's future. By 2025, Anchorage aims to be the #1 city in America to live, work, and play. The city's 250 miles of trails (135 miles paved) are playing a key role in the initiative. The plan has been widely accepted, with more than 100 business partners supporting it and 95 percent of citizens agreeing that the Anchorage trail system contributes to making the city a great place to live. Featured National Recreation Trail: Chinqua-Penn Walking Trail, North Carolina

The 1.7-mile Chinqua-Penn Walking Trail winds through old-growth forest, skirts two ponds, and follows the fence lines of pastures where a prized historic Black Angus herd graze. Built on land formerly part of the Chinqua-Penn Plantation created by industrialist Jefferson Penn in the 1920s, the trail was completed in 1997 and designated as a National Recreation Trail in 2015. The 1.7-mile route is a key link in the Rockingham County Pathways plan and is frequently used as an outdoor classroom for nature study by Scouts, school groups, youth groups, and campers from the adjacent Betsy-Jeff Penn 4-H Center. Featured Recreational Trails Program-funded project: Whistle Stop Trail, Maine

The Whistle Stop Trail runs 14 miles from Jay to Farmington through rolling hills and rural farmland. The trail is open for snowmobiling, hiking, biking, cross-country skiing, and equestrian and ATV use. The State leased the right-of-way from the railroad for several years to keep the route open for multi-use purposes. A major trestle over Wilson Stream was rebuilt due to safety concerns from dry rot that had affected the structure. The new trestle was made wider to accommodate snowmobile groomers in the winter, as well as for horses and ATV riders. Read more and see photos on this RTP-funded project...

Japan's Michinoku Coastal Trail supports tsunami recovery

The Michinoku Shiokaze Trail is one of a series of "Green Recovery Projects" operated by the Japanese Ministry of Environment to revitalize the Sanriku ("sea breeze") Coast, which was heavily damaged in the 2011 tsunami. The coastal trail will eventually stretch for 700 km along the East Coast of Japan, showcasing the Pacific coastline and rural coastal life, all the while encouraging tourism and rebuilding of the local economy. The trail is also intended to be an evacuation route from any future disasters. Throughout the reconstruction, the Ministry hopes both "the blessings and threats that nature brings" will be studied. Singapore Nature Park to offer separate biking and hiking trails

The Chestnut Nature Park, located in the Central Catchment Nature Reserve, is the first park in Singapore to offer separate hiking and biking trails. This is the first phase of projects directed towards increasing safety to park visitors in Singapore. The park now features a one-mile biking trail and a 1.3-mile hiking trail. When the second phase of construction is complete, the biking trail will be 3.1 miles with a 3.7-mile hiking trail. Read more and see photos...
National Recreation and Park Association study: American's perception on parks

This nation-wide study, commissioned by the National Recreation and Park Association (NRPA) and conducted by Pennsylvania State University, expands on the 1992 study on American’s perceptions of local parks and recreation services. The findings conclude that Americans don't see public parks just as luxuries, but as a critical infrastructure worthy of consistent investment. The researchers surveyed more than 1,100 American's, revealing that Americans are as enthusiastic in their support for public parks as they were 25 years ago. Download the 16-page study... National Center for Transit Research releases report on linking trails and greenways

This study examines the connectivity between public transportation services and public trails by looking at Hillsborough County and Pinellas County in Florida. The goal of the research was to develop a methodology to provide better connections between public transportation and trails using Geographic Information Systems (GIS) spatial analysis. These connections would extend the transit system and enable pedestrians to access areas they might not be able to due to traffic, physical barriers, or safety concerns. Cool Trail Solutions- Accessible trails: surfacing considerations and examples

The accessibility of a trail requires surfaces to be firm and stable, but concrete and asphalt aren't the only surfaces found on accessible trails.
Other surfaces, such as crusher fines, can be more suitable for trails in open space, parks, and the back country. Crusher fines compact well and provide drainage to trails, as well as being a more affordable option than concrete and asphalt.
